Group of Redwoods Spotted Entering Silvermoon City Warlock Den

Jinthas and his entourage making a deal?

One thing about Redwoods, you can always tell when they are out of place.

In fact, as they arrived in the parlor of the Warlock's den, the familiar of one Warlock was immediately calling out almost every statement made as a deception and untruth! Are imps just natural lie detectors or is it something ingrained in the Tribes way to not be duplicitous in nature?

Either way, the group finally came clean and without selling their souls, at least hopefully not this time, the Tribes struck a deal with a warlock, Alicia Darkfire.

Chieftain Kaylan Ragehorn makes an offering...

A strange sight met the denizens of the mage quarter at Undercity recently as Redwood Tribes visited not only the area of the wizards and warlocks, but the demonic masters engaged in ritualistic summonings as little as just two moons past.

The task: Summon the demon hunter, Taharkah Thundersong, her soul bound to a Shivarra demon and believed to now be in the Twisting Nether... waiting. Under the guidance of one demonologist, four of the Redwoods gifted in arcane energy, drew the lines of a ritual circle and then one by one, many of the Tribes offered a token of sacrifice, something special and connected to the one being summoned.

While the Chieftain, Kaylan Ragehorn, waited for her offering, her demeanor spoke of the seriousness and depth of her connection to the one being summoned.

For a final offering, Jinthas Cindersong brought forth a collapsed motorbike. As it enlarged he sat atop the bike and rolled it over the summoning fire and leaped off, many present remembering instances of Thundersong's many dating escapades and outings across Azeroth. While some prepared defensive shields, luckily, the bike was accepted as an offering before the fuel caught fire and disrupted the ritual.

Even those that did not know Taharkah Thundersong, they still joined the circle and began to offer spiritual energy in the form of their callings and skills as the demonologist prepared to use the connection of the "Demon Pact" made with the antlered Shu'halo as the final bond to pull the demon back to the plane of mortals.

Redwoods ready, the summoning began.

Whatever thoughts and chants were offered around the circle, the energy of those present, the spells, the desire to see their friend again, the demonologist earned her gold and the demon was summoned forth... Are there still plans in the making to get rid of the Shivarra demon half, or will the Tribes need to make good on their part of the bargain and enter the Black Temple to revive... Illidan Stormrage?

Yestermoon's News

or the quick catch up on some of the action!

Thunderama w/ Thunderhoof

The Thunderhoof Tribe under direction of their Great Mother lead off a traditional fighting pit, including King of the Mountain, traditional fist-fighting, and challenge duels. A good place to test the prowess of warriors, it was the hunters and their trusted companions that stood out in the early going! The Redwoods and more guests joined in on the fun and many learned a thing or two as the evening progressed.

More than just fighting, the event also saw cake sellers and redwood's own roadhouse made sure there was plenty of ale on hand, even featuring a few new brews from the Spirits of the Earth Mother!

Anyone planning a visit here? Wait and find out!

What is Mok Ragetotem Investigating now. Shouldn't the Bluff Captain be on the Bluffs?

Or is he just planning on cooking a large meal?

General Cin'dol and the paper zeppelins made for some fun as the Tribes tried to relax from their recent adventures with a beach party planned by First Chieftain of the Tribes, Ayashe Brightmane.

At the same party, there appeared to be some unusual sunsets as the tribesmembers lounged or swam just outside of Gromgol Base.
