Mate Life

A first-person field account by Redwood Times reporter: Kugalla, Brave of Redwood Tribe

Denek Southfury Makes History at Tall Tales!

Fireflies swirled in the humid summer night over the heads of the jovial gathered patrons of the Horde, who came together in a semi-circle around a bonfire for mostly the same reasons, Tall Tales. It was story night, and there had been many riveting recollections, one of how a mountain had gotten his name, a ghastly tale of two lovers who would not accept being apart, one of honor and bravery, and another told by a man that was more story himself than what he had to say... Poems and jokes were shared, but then the words of one Tauren changed what I knew life to be completely. Denek stood before the flames of the bonfire; his chestnut fur outlined in an angelic glow of orange and yellow.

He called me to stand with him, in front of our many friends and Tribesmen. I thought he had become suddenly ill as he sank to the ground to a knee. I reached for him but out he pulled a shimmering black stone ring out of his pouch that locked me in place. "Would you marry me?" he requested, the sheen in his eyes rivaling the sparkle of the gem he offered as a token of his love. Some of the crowd gasped and tilted forward expectantly, waiting anxiously for what I had to say. This was unlike any Shu'halo ceremony I had ever seen. The millions of thoughts that clouded my mind in shock released their grip and I remembered that Denek was still waiting for an answer. "Yes, I will be honored to become your life-mate... now, get up off your knee!"

We must stay strong, whether we fight in Zandalar, protect our lands, or march to support Horde forces in Arathi Highlands. We will not win this war if we are divided! Our differences often separate us; these same differences are why the Alliance does not accept that we have a right to our lands, our homes, and our lives. How do we not fall into the same thoughts as those alliance that would see us as less than people? Acceptance of each other's cultures and ways is the Horde answer! May Earth Mother watch over us all! Lohkawas Wildmane, Mystic of Redwood Tribe
