Alliance Kodo Killers!

*and a little catch up on recent happenings...

Okwaho Redwood, Sage and one time Chieftain of Redwood Tribes, give Official Notice from the Azeroth Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Kodo or ASPCK, originally founded by Rumsey a.k.a. Rumford Seywell of the Wandering Watering Hole, to the Alliance Murderers seen in Mulgore the last few passages of Mu'sha, that your atrocities have not gone unnoticed.

You are also given notice, that your transgressions occurred during a time when the Longwalker was away on the High Chieftain's business... as you saw last evening, the Longwalker is back and with the aid and assistance of visitors to the Bluffs and our friends in Bulwark and the Lighthouse, you were sorely outmatched with her return. Your murder and abuse of the Kodo did not go unnoticed. We draw your attention to the original plea of the ASPCK to protect the endangered Kodo - <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=7EiwM8sHUBo>

Redwood Tribes is in good standing with the ASPCK and will be choosing a manner of payback commensurate to the abuse you have caused on the Kodo of Mulgore and the denizens of Bloodhoof Village and Thunder Bluff.

However, we will not stoop so low as to kill your defenseless animals, we will come for you and your honorless alliance leaders.

Any further injustice to the Kodo will gain additional ire from the Tribes and loyal A.S.P.C.K. members.

*You have been warned!

and avid Kodo Defender*

p.s. Additionally, those Horde that think the Kodo should be hunted should also hear the plea of the ASPCK and take that into consideration... or you may find yourselves subjected to a scathing editorial and possible invitation to debate your stance at a future Thunder Bluff Debate... In fact, I look forward to it!

Tribes party in Ironforge for St Patrick's Celebration

Never one to pass up a party, Redwood Tribes wore green, brought ale, and even welcomed Alliance to join the celebration for St. Patrick's Day sponsored by Redwood's Roadhouse!

Unlike past visits to Ironforge, bloodshed was kept to a minimum and for a few brief hours, Horde and Alliance found they had something in common... ale and dancing. Its a start, right?

Well, it would be a start, except most attendees don't seem to remember what happened after copious amounts of brew! So, good times had by all ;)

The Story of Helheim

Journey to Retrieve a Chieftain from.. Helheim?

Helheim, realm of Helya, a Titan Keeper.

Chieftain Okwaho Redwood had been taken prisoner by Helya in an act of revenge for the group thwarting and standing against her, the Redwood's sought to get him back in a daring assault upon her realm, with only the word of a Demon Hunter from an alternate realities future that she could secure them passage out once they succeeded.

The assault started with a daring plan by Jinthas Cindersong to assist the Tuskarr's aid and grant them the use of one of their turtles. A huge crab was defeated by a handful of Tribesmembers under the leadership of now Chieftain and Longwalker Kaylan Ragehorn, not only stopping the loss of life at the crab's claws, but in donating several tons of crabmeat for a Tuskarr feast!

Thomas the turtle and Turtle-handler Toki make good on the Tuskarr deal and deliver the tribes to a K'valdir Raiding vessel. The task, take over the vessel and force the Captain to deliver them to Helheim.

The plan did not quite work out, but the Captain and Mistcaller's under attack turned their raiding vessel around and headed for Helheim all the same. But the planned surprise attack on Helya's realm was no longer a secret.

Still, Jinthas Cindersong thought that a special bomb he had secured and brought with them would be a big enough surprise to stop Helya in her tracks... until she grew 200 feet in size eliminating his plan.

Leidolfr's plan now went into affect. They would take the Trials of Might, Will, and Valor to win back Okwaho and their freedom from Helheim. Helya, in return, gave them a choice, while playing yo-yo with Okwaho's body from high above the group, leave now without Okwaho, or should they fail, her real goal for hounding the Redwood's became apparent, she would not only keep them all in her realm of the unworthy dead, she would also take the knowledge of the runes Leidolfr had been searching for since coming to the past when the Hourglass was cracked so long ago; knowledge that he hoped would stave off damage to the Earth Mother in a future attack that both he and the Demon Hunter were aware of.

Challenge accepted on both sides, the groups of Valor, Will, and Might set about overcoming their Trials.

Branharak Skybreaker led the team of Will up a steep mountain to rescue Okwaho, beset by storm and avalanche.

Jinthas Cindorsong led the team of Valor to rescue Thomas the turtle and his handler Toki, while also presented with challenges of helping the spirits of Tuskarr along the way.

Kaylan Ragehorn led the team of Might as they faced an experienced and deadly Master of Runes.

And for all three teams, Helya sought to overwhelm each member with whispers of distrust and doubt to gnaw at their souls.

In the end, Helya claimed that one of the teams had failed.

True to her word, Taharkah Thundersong, Chaotic Demon Hunter from the future, attempted to cloak and help the Tribes escape the realm, but Helya as mistress of her realm saw through the cloak and swatted the Demon Hunter from the sky and broke her body upon the mountains.

Still, perhaps another titan keeper felt his trials to find those worthy of his halls of valor felt the Redwood's had passed the test and Val'kyr arrived to ferry them safely from Helheim, which included Leidolfr retrieving Thundersong's body, Okwaho Redwood, and Toki and Thomas.

Still in the end, some of the Tribes, including the Chieftain had much to consider on their ride back to Moa'ki Harbor.

Shuhalo Demon Hunter? Thundersong, what did you do now? Rumor has it, this Thundersong is from a different reality, and after recent escapades might be deceased? Stay tuned...

Redwood Trading Post in Grizzly Hills. Something is not quite right here. A human has obviously stolen the Redwood brand. And we can't even attack him and chase him out.
