Running of the Warlocks

Why do the Warlocks Run?

Nov 10 2019 - From Rizgorag's Viewpoint

Warlocks Running the World!

Or at least running from the Valley of Trials to Elwynn Forest. Part training, part initial strike into the heartland of the Humans, 4 mighty Warlocks ran to make a difference. Not your run of the mill charity run or to better all of Azeroth's citizens, instead this was a run for Power, Domination, Warlocks Intent on Taking Over Stormwind, and this was only the beginning.

While there was a small setback in Duskshire with a Human guard station, the Sindorei companion assigned to the group, "We thought she was assigned but instead just may have been a passerby" noted one of the Orc Warlocks later, was handy at returning life to the determined bunch. Cutting through a forest of raging spiders, the Warlocks almost lost the Sindorei at the river. It seemed she did not want to get wet crossing into Elwynn, but the Warlocks urged her into continuing on.

Now in Elwynn, Rizgorag informed his young compatriots of their primary target. The infamous Hogger! Together they valiantly cut down numerous gnolls until faced with their target. The newly empowered and enraged Warlocks fired shadowbolt after shadowbolt and when it seemed victory was at hand, it was snatched away by Humans, who merely arrested the beat down Beast of the Forests. While the warlocks stood forlorn and confused on the edge of their victory, their Sindorei companion laughing long into the night, Hogger was teleported beyond their reach... for now.

Someday Hogger, your soul and all of Azeroth will belong to the new breed of Warlocks born this day!

11.8.2019 Swarm and Redwood Join the Battle

The skirmishes have become heated since the last edition. Fights at Light's Hope Chapel, Southshore, and do not forget Blackrock Mountain, have raged continuously with each faction, Horde and Alliance, controlling and being routed in turn.

The back and forth is incessant, and if you are not prepared and skilled, you will end up with serious injuries and calling for aid.

Swarm and Redwood took Astranaar, Southshore and later held Menethil Harbor at bay, until Alliance forces rallied. Until next time, Alliance!

Featured Story as told by Elu

The First Windrider

My tale today concerns a creature that we all rely on for our travel: The venerable wyvern. Each day they stoically ferry us all across azeroth, through all manner of war and weather. These flightmaster wyverns hail from the Stonetalon mountains and vowed their service to Thrall's Horde after the orcs defended them from a vicious harpy invasion. But the orcs were not the first to earn the favor of the pridewing. Before the opening of the Dark Portal, there was another windrider among my people, the Shu'halo. The tale I have for you all today comes from Elu of Freewind Post, an apprentice windrider. It goes as such:

Long ago before the first orcs came to our lands and gained the respect of the Stonetalon wyverns, a terrible drought had destroyed the once abundant crops of blue-leaf tubers the people of Thousand needles relied on. The centaur of the region, also desperate for supplies and sensing the weakness of the Tauren, took control of the great lift and plundered all incoming supply caravans, leaving the people of Freewind Post stranded and without aid.

The wise elders of Freewind looked westward to the perilous but fertile lands of Feralas. Settling the untamed thicket would not be as simple as clearing a bit of land and moving a few yurts. Lurking along the border between thousand needles and feralas was a horrible beast!

A terrible creature that even the most ferocious hyena or savage bear feared: the chimera Razzak. Its form was twisted by the fury in its heart. Enormous wings darkened the skies as it passed, and from twin maws it loosed the fury of the storm, both frost and lightning striking down all who tread near. Every scouting party sent to cross the border was torn apart by the beast. No weapon or skill of the Tauren could match the chimera's ferocity and aerial agility.

Meanwhile, the cliff watchers that normally guarded the Mesa were sent to the far reaches of the territory to forage for food and supplies. Among them was an apprentice cliff watcher, her first names lost to time. She was a small Tauren, made short and lean by life among the needles.

Early one morning while searching for any herbs or game to feed the camp, the young Tauren came across a strange sight. Driven by starvation, a pack of centaur had ensnared an enormous wyvern. Entangled in a large net, the wyvern lashed out at the centaurs with its deadly stinger and kept their spears at bay.

Seeing the powerful beast laid low by the centaur reminded the young Tauren of her own people's plight, and she knew she had to free it.

Now this young Tauren was not strong in body and knew she could not best the pack of centaur alone, but she was quite clever. Thinking quickly, the Tauren looked among the crevices in the stones along the canyon until she came upon a nest of wind serpents. With incredible speed, she snatched two adult serpents behind their heads and pulled them loose, careful to avoid their venomous fangs and lightning breath. She lashed the two windserpents together with twine and set about her plan.

The shadow of a great pair of wings darkened the canyon walls. Two ferocious heads writhed across the mesas as forks of lightning split against the dusty earth. The centaurs were blinded by fear and fled back towards their camp as fast as their legs could carry them.

The wyvern thrashed and snarled in the net until around the corner came the little Tauren with a wind serpent in each hand. The beast shook off the ropes as quickly as they were cut. It towered over the Tauren, glaring and tail poised to strike, when suddenly, the wyvern spoke.

"Little hoof-beast, you have freed me and in doing so have wounded by pride terribly. It would have been better to die than to need rescue. I should kill you where you stand!"

Again, thinking quickly, the little tauren cried: "Stop! I know a way to reclaim your pride a hundred fold!"

She explained the plight of her people against the chimera. Impressed by her cleverness the wyvern agreed to help. Together they came up with a plan to slay the beast.

With bolas in hand and spear on her back, she mounted the wyvern and they took to the skies! They soared high above the mesas until they spotted it: The Chimera, thrashing its tails and snapping at the air as it glided low to the ground.

For all its ferocity and strength the Chimera had one great weakness: It had no reason to look up.

The wyvern dove as the Tauren threw her bolas, catching the chimera's wings and sending it crashing to the earth. In an instant the wyvern was upon it, striking the beast with its venomous string in the back. From the back of the wyvern, the young Tauren thrust her spear into the creature, delivering the final blow. Thus, Razzak was no more.

With the help of the wyvern and its kin, the people of Freewind Post pushed back the centaur from the Great Lift and cleared the way to Feralas. Through her daring exploits the Tauren became known by a new tribe name, one you may know: Wildwind.

The lake nearby Camp Mojache in Feralas is named in her honor, so that we may remember her great deeds.

Thus ends the tale of the first wind rider.

Grobbulus Gobble Turkey Parade

11.24.2019 - Crossroads to Thrall's Chamber

The Horde gathered in Crossroads to begin a new tradition, a marching parade ending in the Chamber of the Warchief and a Feast of Celebration, grateful for the bonds forged in battle and hardship.

One person remarked, it should be named Pilgrim's Bounty and become a yearly event!

Did anyone tell the Warchief we were coming over?

Things One Should Know

Gossip at The Broken Tusk

Something Stirs in the North

Only one rising of An'she and already arguments have broken out between the Shu'halo and the rest of the Horde races... Apparently as Winter's Veil approaches, deeply held beliefs are the source of the issues.

"I guess we will see who is naughty or nice", said one Ratchet Goblin to the confusion of an Elder Shu'halo. His reply was simply, "Shu'halo are always nice!"

What is in that Pipe?

Bluffwatchers have reported numerous trolls dancing in the long huts of Thunder Bluff... specifically at the lodgings ceremonial pipes. Three trolls from Atal'Alarion were chased from the middle-rise with threats to inform Vir'jin that the ceremonial dream dust is not for recreational purposes.

Fireworks and Safety

Scarlet Monastery Sells Fireworks, or at least that is what the advertisement said, says one Nby of Redwood Tribes. "As a safety inspector, I checked the fireworks being sold for the Parade and found they were just too dangerous. A real engineer understands these issues and I urge consumers to consider the source!"

Redwood Tribes News

Skyseer's View

I am Okwaho Skyseer, adviser to the Redwood Tribes, Seer of the Earthen Ring, and speaker to the editor that writes these words.

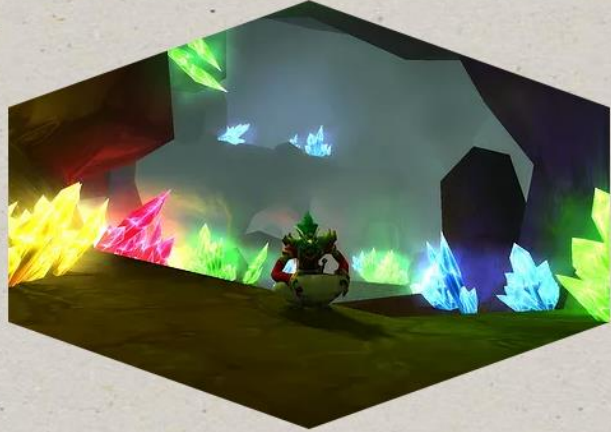

Looking back on the last few moons, I see that we have grown stronger, yet, have we grown strong enough to face the battles that hover on the horizon?

There are still journeys we must take and we must reach out and take them together. We continue to look on the Forsaken with distrust, or those Orcs that made choices to follow someone other than the current Warchief.

We must learn to judge others by their merits and actions, and we must find ways to grow these disparate bonds.

As the High Chieftain has bid the Tribes, "it is time to be one in strength and honor!"
